Committee on Enforced Disappearances

The relationship of the Committee on Enforced Disappearances with National Human Rights Institutions

1. The Committee on Enforced Disappearances (hereinafter referred to as the “Committee”) considers that close cooperation between the Committee and national human rights institutions is important for the promotion and implementation of the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance both at the domestic and international levels.
2. For this reason, at its fourth session, the Committee decided to appoint a rapporteur to prepare, with the support of the Secretariat, a first draft of a document on the relationship of the Committee on Enforced Disappearances with national human rights institutions. At its sixth session, the Committee discussed a first draft and decided to seek comments from national human rights institutions before the document’s adoption at its seventh session. The purpose of the present document is to clarify and further develop the Committee’s relationship with national human rights institutions and to enhance their contribution to the promotion and implementation of the Convention at the domestic level.

I. Introduction

3. The Committee notes that, to fulfil their roles effectively, national human rights institutions should be established, and where necessary strengthened, in full compliance with the principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (Paris Principles), and be duly accredited as such by the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights (ICC).
4. The Committee is of the view that all States parties to the Convention shall establish and/or strengthen national human rights institutions in full compliance with the Paris Principles and that their mandate shall include issues related to the prevention of, and fight against, enforced disappearances.
5. The Committee considers that, besides civil society actors (see CED/C/3), national human rights institutions<sup>1</sup>, as well as specific national mechanisms with a mandate to promote and protect human rights (e.g. national preventive mechanisms), also have a key role to play in assisting the Committee in fulfilling the different activities that it may carry out in accordance with the Convention.
6. At the domestic level, national human rights institutions may promote human rights education and training; raise awareness about the Convention, in particular about its urgent action and individual communications procedures and the Committee’s work; work on follow-up to, and monitor implementation of the Committee’s concluding observations, Views, recommendations adopted after a country visit and other decisions; monitor of places of detention and oversee the prohibition of secret detention; and monitor, and advise the State on, legislative and policy compliance with the Convention provisions.

<sup>1</sup> These guidelines apply mutatis mutandis to local institutions which may exist in a decentralized or federal State.

7. At the international level, national human rights institutions may encourage and assist the State party to meet its reporting obligations and to make declarations under articles 31 and 32 of the Convention, concerning individual and inter-State communications respectively, in relation to those States parties that have not done so; and provide the Committee with independent information on the implementation of the Convention at the domestic level. National human rights institutions may as well promote ratification of the Convention in other States as well acceptance of the competence of the Committee under articles 31 and 32 of the Convention.

8. The Committee shall ensure the greatest access to its work to national human rights institutions. Accordingly, the Committee's secretariat provides national human rights institutions with information in a timely manner and advises on opportunities to engage with the Committee's work. Further, the Committee's secretariat liaises with the ICC Geneva Representative Office, which aims at encouraging the national human rights institutions to be more effective in their collaboration with the Committee's work, including by sharing information, publishing the Committee's work and advising such institutions about opportunities to contribute.

9. The Committee also welcomes the representation of national human rights institutions at its sessions and meetings, including by video and/or telephone conference links.

II. The role of national human rights institutions in the reporting procedure under article 29 of the Convention

10. Noting that consideration of State parties' reports by the Committee is based on a constructive dialogue with States parties, the Committee considers necessary that it be based on information received from the broadest possible constituency including intergovernmental organizations, civil society actors, national human rights institutions and specific national mechanisms, such as national preventive mechanisms<sup>2</sup>. In this respect, the Committee recognizes that all these stakeholders can contribute to all stages of the reporting process under the Convention including by providing information for the preparation of the list of issues and the public review of States parties reports, and with regard to follow-up to concluding observations.

11. National human rights institutions are encouraged to provide alternative reports that contain information on the implementation of some or all the provisions of the Convention; comments on the reports of State parties and their written replies to the list of issues; and information on the implementation by the State party concerned of the concluding observations of the Committee. National human rights institutions are requested to ensure that their reports are submitted within the deadlines provided by the Secretariat and that they are submitted in accordance with the guidelines set forth to that effect.

A. State reporting requirements under the Convention

12. The Committee considers that national human rights institutions have an important role in encouraging their respective States to meet their reporting obligations under article 29 of the Convention.

13. The Committee encourages national human rights institutions to conduct human rights education and awareness programmes, with a view to informing and sensitizing State officials and other stakeholders, including civil society actors, about the reporting obligations of States under article 29 of the Convention.

B. Consultations and inputs to the State party report

14. The Committee recognizes the value of States parties organizing broad national consultations when drafting their reports under the Convention. In this regard, the Committee also recognizes the value of States making their reports available in advance to national human rights institutions and to all sectors of civil society, and inviting all stakeholders for consultations thereon. However, the role played by national human rights institutions in providing information for the State party's report should not exclude the possibility of submitting an alternative report to the Committee.

C. Contributions to the preparation of the list of issues

15. Receiving information from national human rights institutions at an early stage of the reporting process is critical for the Committee's work. Accordingly, the Committee invites national human rights institutions to submit written contributions to the preparation of the list of issues.

16. To facilitate the timely submission of national human rights institution reports, the Committee's secretariat provides the institution concerned with advance notice of reporting schedules and advice on opportunities to contribute thereto.

D. Contributions to and during the Committee sessions

17. The Committee welcomes the submission of alternative reports and oral presentations by national human rights institutions and the presence of such institutions as observers during the examination of the State party's report.

18. National human rights institutions have the possibility of addressing the Committee in formal private and closed meetings. The meetings allow for interactive discussions and sharing of updated additional information between the Committee and national human rights institutions. There are additional opportunities for national human rights institutions to provide the Committee with detailed information during informal private briefings. The privacy of the meeting aims at ensuring that national human rights institutions can engage freely and effectively with the Committee without fear of intimidation or reprisal.

E. Contributions in follow-up to concluding observations

19. Under the Paris Principles, national human rights institutions have a specific mandate to monitor and report on the compliance of their respective State with international human rights instruments, including compliance with recommendations resulting from international human rights bodies. National human rights institutions can provide the Committee with written information, including an evaluation of the measures taken by the State party to implement the concluding observations that were selected by the Committee for the follow-up procedure. These contributions should be submitted to the Committee at the time the State party is due to submit follow-up information on the selected concluding observations (namely one year after their adoption), or once the State party's follow-up information is made public. Such information should concern the implementation of recommendations highlighted in the concluding observations for consideration under the follow-up procedure.

20. The Committee welcomes and supports the important role of national human rights institutions with respect to supporting the follow-up of the Committee's concluding observations in the country, while always recalling that the duty to implement the Convention rests with States themselves. National human rights institutions can support implementation in a number of ways, which include the following: broadly disseminating the concluding observations; organizing follow-up consultations involving the Government and civil society actors, as well as parliament and other bodies; and advising their respective States to mainstream concluding observations throughout national planning and legislative review processes. Further, the Committee encourages national human rights institutions to use their annual reports to monitor implementation of the Committee's concluding observations.

21. To ensure the most effective involvement of national human rights institutions in the Committee's follow-up procedure, the Committee's secretariat provides those institutions concerned with advance notice of follow-up procedure schedules as well as advice on opportunities to contribute thereto.

F. Contributions under the review procedure (examination in the absence of a State report)

22. The Committee encourages national human rights institutions to submit alternative reports in cases in which the Committee has decided to examine a State party in the absence of a State report. National human rights institutions will be provided with the same contribution opportunities as under the regular reporting procedure, including in relation to the list of issues if the Committee decides to adopt one. The examination of a State party in the absence of a report is conducted in public session and the concluding observations will be released publicly after adoption, in line with the procedure set forth with regard to the regular reporting procedure under article 29.

III. The role of national human rights institutions in relation to the urgent action procedure under article 30 of the Convention

23. In accordance with article 30 of the Convention, either the relatives of a person who has been reportedly enforcedly disappeared, their legal representatives, their counsel or any other person authorized by them, as well as any other person having a legitimate interest, may submit to the Committee a request that a person be sought and found as a matter of urgency.

24. In this regard, national human rights institutions may have a particular role to play in assisting the persons mentioned in the previous paragraph to submit these requests, as well as in liaising with the Committee for as long as the fate of the person sought remains unresolved.

25. Authors of urgent action requests shall ensure that the Committee timely receives updated information for as long as the fate of the person sought remains unresolved.

IV. The role of national human rights institutions in relation to the individual communications procedure under article 31 of the Convention

26. In accordance with article 31 of the Convention, any individual subject to the jurisdiction of a State party claiming to be victim of a violation of the provisions of the Convention by such State party, or others acting on their behalf, may submit individual communications to the Committee for its consideration.

27. In this regard, national human rights institutions may play an important role in providing assistance to the alleged victims of these violations in submitting individual communications to the Committee. Authors of individual communications are strongly encouraged to submit follow-up information on the implementation of the Committee's Views and interim measures, when appropriate.

28. Once the Views are made public, it is important that authors verify that implementation has indeed taken place.

V. The role of national human rights institutions with regard to country visits by the Committee under article 33 of the Convention

29. The Committee considers that national human rights institutions may play an important role in providing to the Committee reliable information indicating that a State party is seriously violating the provisions of the Convention, which may trigger a visit by the Committee to the State party concerned under the terms of article 33 of the Convention.

30. National human rights institutions may also play an important role before and during the country visit of the Committee by providing updated information and participating, or facilitating the participation of victims of enforced disappearance, in the meetings or hearings that the Committee may undertake to determine facts or issues relevant to the assessments of the situation in the State party concerned.

31. National human rights institutions are strongly encouraged to transmit to the Committee information on the status of implementation of the recommendations made by the Committee to the State party concerned in relation to the country visit, as well as relevant reliable information on any developments that may have taken place after the country visit.

VI. The role of national human rights institutions in bringing to the attention of the Committee information related to widespread or systematic practices of enforced disappearances under the terms of article 34 of the Convention

32. The Committee further considers that national human rights institutions may also play a very important role in providing to the Committee information containing well-founded indications that enforced disappearance is being practiced on a widespread or systematic basis in the territory under the jurisdiction of a State party, which may trigger the Committee to bring such information to the attention of the General Assembly in accordance with article 34 of the Convention.

VII. Input on the drafting and use of the Committee's general comments

33. The Committee encourages national human rights institutions to provide input on general comments under consideration and on the days of general discussion it may organize. To ensure the most effective contributions of national human rights institutions in these processes, the Committee shall announce as soon as possible the general comments it would consider or the days of general discussion it intends to organize. National human rights institutions are encouraged to make use of the Committee's general comments in their advocacy efforts.

VIII. The role of national human rights institutions in addressing women's and children's rights and in integrating a gender perspective

34. The impact of enforced disappearance on women and children is of particular concern to the Committee. National human rights institutions can play a very important role in providing the Committee with specific information on violations of women's and children's rights and, when available, statistical data on cases of enforced disappearance disaggregated by, inter alia, sex and age, when submitting information in the context of articles 29, 30, 31, 33 and 34 of the Convention.

35. National human rights institutions are encouraged to integrate a gender perspective in their submissions, highlighting in particular the existing obstacles to the equal enjoyment of rights by women and men victims of enforced disappearance.

IX. The role of national human rights institutions in bringing to the attention of the Committee reports on reprisals

36. In order to protect national representatives of human rights institutions who have sought to address and/or cooperate or have addressed and/or cooperated with the Committee from intimidation, persecution or reprisal, including measures of a legislative, administrative, financial or any other nature that may curtail the independence of the national human rights institution, the Committee may consider, at its discretion or at the request of the author, that the information, documentation and statements received be kept confidential and decide not to make them public. In these cases, the Committee will decide on how to use such information.

37. The Committee also considers that national human rights institutions play a very important role in providing to the Committee reports on cases of intimidation, persecution or reprisal against any individual who has sought to address and/or cooperate or has addressed and/or cooperated with the Committee by submitting information in relation to the State parties' reporting procedure under article 29, urgent actions, individual communications, information relevant to violations of the Convention or by having met the Committee during its country visits. In this regard, the Committee has decided to appoint a Rapporteur on reprisals.

X. Enhancing global outreach

38. The Committee welcomes the cooperation and input of national human rights institutions and notes that logistical and financial constraints sometimes limit their possibility to attend its sessions. The Committee therefore welcomes and encourages the use of technology to enhance contributions from all regions during its sessions, such as video or telephone conference links and webcasting.

39. The Committee, within its power, will ensure that its sessions are accessible by persons with disabilities so that they can fully and effectively participate in its work and that reasonable accommodation will be provided to them.

40. The Committee further encourages national human rights institutions to make independent efforts to translate the Committee's documents into local languages.

41. The Committee also encourages national human rights institutions, when relevant, to advocate for the ratification of the Convention and/or acceptance by States parties of the competence of the Committee under articles 31 and 32 of the Convention.

42. Finally, the Committee welcomes and encourages the efforts of national human rights institutions to enhance outreach and awareness, including through training, of the Convention and the tools it provides to the Committee, as well as of its concluding observations, in particular those stemming from the review procedure of a State party in the absence of a report, Views, recommendations made in the context of country visits and general comments. . The Committee particularly encourages national human rights institutions to draw upon the International Day of the Victims of Enforced Disappearances, observed on 30 August, to carry out their outreach and awareness activities.
