Introduction

1. The Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review, established in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 of 18 June 2007, held its fourteenth session from 22 October to 5 November 2012. The review of Switzerland was held at the 9th meeting, on 29 October 2012. The delegation of Switzerland was headed by Federal Councillor Didier Burkhalter. At its 13th meeting, held on 31 October 2012, the Working Group adopted the report on Switzerland.

2. On 3 May 2012, the Human Rights Council selected the following group of rapporteurs (troika) to facilitate the review of Switzerland: Belgium, Costa Rica and Nigeria.

3. In accordance with paragraph 15 of the annex to Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 and paragraph 5 of the annex to Council resolution 16/21, the following documents were issued for the review of Switzerland:

(a) A national report submitted and a written presentation made in accordance with paragraph 15 (a) (A/HRC/WG.6/14/CHE/1);

(b) A compilation prepared by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in accordance with paragraph 15 (b) (A/HRC/WG.6/14/CHE/2);

(c) A summary prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (c) (A/HRC/WG.6/14/CHE/3).

4. A list of questions prepared in advance by Denmark, Germany, Finland, Maldives, Mexico, the Netherlands, Norway, Slovenia and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland was transmitted to Switzerland through the troika. These questions are available on the extranet of the universal periodic review (UPR).

I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. The Swiss delegation noted that human rights were part of the core values of the country's political and legal system. They were enshrined in its Constitution as well as its internal and foreign policy. Owing to these rights, Swiss nationals as well as all those who had found a safe haven in Switzerland were living together in diversity and freedom, with mutual respect and equal opportunities. It was also for that reason that Switzerland was proud to host here in Geneva the Human Rights Council and OHCHR.

6. The delegation noted that the Federal Council considered the level of human rights protection in Switzerland to be good. However, no country in the world could afford to be complacent in this regard. Respect for human rights remained a permanent task. In that regard, Switzerland considered UPR as an opportunity for dialogue. The preparation for the review had been characterized by close cooperation with representatives of the cantons as well as non-governmental organizations, which had welcomed the open and productive atmosphere in which consultations had been held.

7. The Swiss State was based on four main principles, namely democracy, rule of law, federalism and solidarity. These principles guaranteed the unity as well as the diversity by which the Confederation was characterized, the continuation of the tradition of sharing and balancing of powers, and the proximity between these powers and the citizens.

8. Democracy ensured the responsibility and engagement of citizens. The Swiss democratic system encouraged dialogue and the search for solutions by consensus, with due regard to the concerns of minorities.

9. The rule of law served as a guarantee for fundamental freedoms, and all efforts were taken to preserve and strengthen it. An important step in the unification of laws had been the entry into force, in January 2011, of several laws and codes of procedure at the federal level, which had replaced corresponding laws of the cantons. These federal laws, which included in particular the Criminal Procedure Code, the Code of Criminal Procedure in Juvenile Justice, and the Civil Procedure Code, constituted a further step in strengthening equality before the law, predictability in the judicial system and human rights protection.

10. The third principle, federalism, meant that authority was distributed according to the principle of subsidiarity. Thus, it was not the Central State which gave directives to the regions, but rather the different cantons of which the Confederation was composed which delegated competencies to the Federal State. In this way, public functions were executed at the communal and cantonal levels, which brought the State close to the citizens and facilitated dialogue between them and the authorities. The interests of different groups could thus be taken into account, with due respect for minorities. Federalism and the protection of minorities were the institutional expression of the cultural, linguistic and religious diversity of Switzerland.

11. Finally, the principle of solidarity alluded to the social functions of the State. It was reflected in the preamble of the Constitution, which provided that “the strength of the community is measured by the well-being of its weakest members”. The social responsibility of the State thus implied a commitment in favour of the most vulnerable individuals, as well as policies promoting job creation and countering exclusion.

12. Concerning the commitments made by Switzerland during the first cycle, the delegation referred to the completed ratification of the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (OP-CAT) and the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (OP-CEDAW). In addition, a number of ratification procedures were currently under way, including with regard to the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance (CPED), and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRPD).

13. Switzerland also recognized the importance of giving individuals recourse to complaints mechanisms. Complaints on rights violations could be brought before the European Court of Human Rights as well as before the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (CAT), International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (ICERD) and Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW). Where violations were found, measures had been taken to avoid their reoccurrence.

14. In addition to existing official and independent consultative mechanisms at the federal and cantonal levels, two new institutions had been created in 2010 and 2011, namely the National Commission for the Prevention of Torture and the Swiss Resource Centre for Human Rights. The establishment of the latter institution had been undertaken with a view to creating a national human rights institutions conforming to the Paris Principles, on which a decision would be taken by the Federal Council after completion of the pilot phase in 2015.

15. With regard to racial discrimination, the delegation noted that Switzerland followed an integration policy that included active measures against all forms of discrimination. Thus, by 2014, integration and anti-discrimination programmes had been developed in all cantons. The access of victims to judicial protection is a central element of this development. Aware of the dangers which extremist ideologies could engender, Switzerland had initiated a national research programme on the extreme right, the results of which had been published in 2010.

16. Although the number of incidents of police brutality of a racist nature had risen in recent years, the number remained relatively low. In order to obtain their licence, police officers had to pass an exam on ethics and human rights. In addition to existing training in human rights, trainings in intercultural understanding and diversity had been instituted for police personnel. Later, the delegation emphasized that ombudspersons and mediation services to deal with cases of police violence existed in several cantons.

17. Concerning human trafficking and sexual exploitation, a national information and prevention campaign had been conducted in 2008, and cooperation agreements to facilitate the identification and protection of victims as well as the prosecution of perpetrators had been concluded with 13 cantons in 2011. In addition, a law for the protection of witnesses had been adopted. Later, it emphasized the national action plan against human trafficking adopted in October 2012, which focused on prevention, criminal proceedings, protection of victims and partnerships.

18. Regarding fundamental freedoms, Switzerland emphasized the existing diversity of religions and efforts to ensure the peaceful coexistence of the different religious communities, without discrimination or exclusion. Concerning the popular initiative on the prohibition of the construction of minarets, the delegation emphasized that the ban touched on neither existing minarets nor on the construction of new places of worship and that freedom of religion is guaranteed. Since 2009, the federal authorities had engaged in dialogue with the Muslim population with a view to addressing fears and preconceptions.

19. Further to several milestones it celebrated in 2011 concerning gender equality, Switzerland emphasized its efforts with regard to the principle of equal wages, in the area of domestic violence, the prohibition of forced marriages and female genital mutilation.

20. Regarding children and youths, Switzerland noted that it had signed, in 2010, the Council of Europe Convention on the Protection of Children against Sexual Exploitation and Abuse and submitted reports under the optional protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC). It had also taken steps nationally to strengthen legislative and practical measures for the protection of children, including on the aspects of international child abduction or protection against cybercrime, and to take account more fully of the particularities of children during civil procedures or in the juvenile justice system. Switzerland reaffirmed that corporal punishment of children in school was prohibited in all Cantons and, later, highlighted programmes in place to prevent the suicide of youth.

21. Concerning persons with disabilities, Switzerland highlighted existing national legislation and policy measures, and progress achieved in eliminating inequalities, including with regard to access to buildings, public transport and other services. The ratification of the United Nations convention in this area was under way.

22. Furthermore, the delegation noted that measures would also be taken in the coming years to improve the legal framework for same sex couples. Starting 2013, registered partnerships would have the same rights as married couples with respect to name. In addition, conditions for the changing of name, sex or civil status would be relaxed.

23. In relation to national minorities, the delegation highlighted important improvements concerning linguistic minorities, but acknowledged that the question of places of stay and transit for travellers remained a delicate subject of discussion.

24. In line with its humanitarian tradition, Switzerland aimed to pursue a welcoming migration policy, offering good conditions for regular migrants and a functioning asylum system. The ongoing public debate in this area had to be seen in the context of the proportion of foreign residents in the country, which, with 22 per cent, was among the highest on the continent. A number of measures were envisaged to further facilitate integration and additional resources were allocated to fight discrimination in the areas of education and work, and in residential areas.

25. Regarding victims of domestic violence, the legislation envisaged a right to stay after the dissolution of the family in certain circumstances. For victims of trafficking, a reflection period of one month and a permit to stay for the duration of the criminal procedure could be granted, subject to further extension in the most severe cases.

26. In 2011, legislative amendments had also been made with regard to the deportation of persons in an irregular situation, which had made the execution of deportations more transparent and subject to independent control.

27. In conclusion, the delegation emphasized the importance which Switzerland placed on defending the universal application of human rights, noting that the federal and cantonal governments were actively committed to that purpose. Although not everything was perfect, human rights were so intimately linked to the culture and values of Switzerland that it was impossible to imagine its very existence without human rights.

B. Interactive dialogue and responses by the State under review

28. During the interactive dialogue, 80 delegations made statements. Recommendations made during the dialogue are to be found in section II of the present report.

29. Maldives thanked Switzerland for the responses to its advance questions. Maldives acknowledged the efforts by Switzerland since the last review but stated that human rights could always be improved in every country. Maldives made recommendations.

30. Mauritania stated that, despite legal provisions to guarantee gender equality at all level, disparities still existed in the labour sector. It encouraged Switzerland to complement political and legal strategy with a sociocultural and educational approach. Mauritania encouraged Switzerland to continue to promote a coherent approach for promotion of human rights, particularly in the field of treatment of migrants, fight against racism, xenophobia and other forms of discrimination.

31. Mexico highlighted the ratification of OP-CEDAW and OP-CAT and the recent establishment of a national commission to prevent torture. It hoped for a prompt ratification of CPED. Mexico made recommendations.

32. Morocco asked about developments in the consultations on the ratification of CRPD and the First Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR). It encouraged Switzerland to pursue its efforts in the fight against religious intolerance and ethnic and racial profiling. It asked about measures envisaged for effective coordination between the Confederation and the cantons for implementation of recommendations from UPR and treaty bodies.

33. The Netherlands commended Switzerland on its good overall human rights record, but stated that challenges still remained, one of which was gender equality, especially in the labour market. It was pleased to note that many NGOs had been consulted in the process of preparing the national report. It made recommendations.

34. New Zealand welcomed the establishment of the National Commission for the Prevention of Torture and acknowledged the existence of bodies working to protect human rights. It remained concerned about issues faced by migrant women, particularly the residence status of those who become victims of domestic violence. It made recommendations.

35. Nicaragua recalled that during its first review Switzerland had received several recommendations regarding social challenges such as the situation of migrants, asylum requests and trafficking in persons. It acknowledged the progress achieved in those areas. Nicaragua made recommendations.

36. Nigeria welcomed the ongoing efforts of Switzerland to ensure that popular initiatives to amend the Swiss constitution were more compatible with international law. It also welcomed the establishment of the Resource Centre for Human Rights and commended Switzerland for granting residence permits to individuals whose repatriation would have constituted a violation of the principle of non-refoulement under CAT. It made a recommendation.

37. Norway was concerned at reports of weak institutional guarantees against discrimination and initiatives incompatible with international human rights standards, such as the ban on constructing minarets, and the underrepresentation of women in decision-making positions in public office, political parties, the diplomatic service and the judiciary. Norway made recommendations.

38. Pakistan expressed concern that the reputation of Switzerland as an open and tolerant country embracing diversity had been tarnished following the ban on constructing minarets. It was also concerned that no legal measures had been adopted to monitor the activities of political parties promoting racism and intolerance. Pakistan made recommendations.

39. Palestine noted efforts to coordinate measures to prevent racism and xenophobia, but was concerned at negative attitudes of part of the population towards foreigners and minorities. It encouraged Switzerland to continue its efforts to prevent and combat xenophobia. Concerning trafficking of women and girls, it noted the adoption of a comprehensive strategy prevent such crimes and bring to justice those responsible.

40. Paraguay recognized the high degree of human rights protection in Switzerland and acknowledged the ratification of the Optional Protocol to CRC regarding the sale of children. Paraguay also noted the Swiss approach to persons with disabilities. Paraguay made recommendations.

41. The Philippines applauded the adoption of policies and programmes strengthening gender equality and women's rights in Switzerland. It hailed the approval of the ratification of the European Convention on Action against Trafficking in Human Beings. It was concerned that migrants, especially women, remained vulnerable to abuse and exploitation. It made a recommendation.

42. Poland welcomed a revision of the Constitution reinforcing guarantees regarding access to justice and the independence of the judiciary, and the establishment of the National Commission for the Prevention of Torture. It noted, however, a lack of progress in combating racist and xenophobic attitudes. Poland made recommendations.

43. The Republic of Moldova congratulated Switzerland on its mid-term report on the implementation of the recommendations from the first UPR cycle. It wished to know the additional measures undertaken to counteract excessive use of force by the police. It also congratulated Switzerland for the progress made in the fight against domestic violence. It made recommendations.

44. Spain highlighted the Swiss efforts to improve the legislation protecting human rights. It also praised the country's constructive participation as a member of the Council. Spain made recommendations.

45. The Russian Federation noted with satisfaction the progress made by Switzerland in implementing international obligations on human rights. However, it also noted some problems in protecting such rights and expressed concern at the recent desecration of the Russian Orthodox Church in Geneva. It made recommendations.

46. Rwanda noted that the Federal Constitution recognized respect for human dignity and equality as a fundamental principle on which Swiss law was based. It praised developments in promoting and protecting human rights, including the ratification of CAT and CEDAW, and progress towards gender equality. Rwanda made recommendations.

47. Slovakia valued the Swiss role in promoting and protecting human rights and fundamental freedoms globally, its support for the United Nations and its flourishing civil society. Commending its commitment to advancing its human rights record since the first UPR, it welcomed the ratification of the OP-CAT and CPED. Slovakia made recommendations.

48. Slovenia commended Switzerland on its active role in the Human Rights Council, on ratifying OP-CAT and on establishing the National Commission for the Prevention of Torture. It welcomed the piloting of the Swiss Resource Centre for Human Rights, although it was not in accordance with the Paris Principles. Slovenia made recommendations.

49. South Africa noted remaining challenges in the areas of racial discrimination and gender equality. It expressed concern about the treatment of non-nationals, inequalities in economic, social and cultural rights, violence against women and the situation of foreign women remaining in abusive relationships for fear of losing their residence permits. South Africa made recommendations.

50. Benin welcomed measures adopted to protect child rights and the entry into force of the Federal Act on the Criminal Procedure Applicable to Minors. It also welcomed the establishment of a federal commission to address migration issues. Benin made a recommendation.

51. Sri Lanka commended efforts to strengthen institutional frameworks, including establishing a national human rights institution in accordance with the Paris Principles. It also commended efforts to address gender inequalities and combat discrimination, including a budget increase for integration programmes to ensure protection against discrimination. It made recommendations.

52. Timor-Leste noted positive progress since the first UPR and commended efforts to bring Swiss legislation into line with international human rights standards. While understanding the challenges facing Switzerland, it suggested that further improvements could be made, not least in combating racial discrimination and xenophobia. It made recommendations.

53. Togo welcomed the national monitoring system to combat racism, but encouraged Switzerland to take more steps to raise awareness of racism and racial discrimination and combat extremism. It also encouraged Switzerland to focus on combating discrimination against vulnerable children, particularly foreign children and children with disabilities.

54. Trinidad and Tobago complimented Switzerland on its endeavours to promote gender equality, as evidenced by the majority of seats in the Federal Council held by women in 2010/2011. It acknowledged efforts to address the problem of trafficking in women and children. It made recommendations.

55. Tunisia noted Government initiatives to ensure that amendments to the Constitution were in line with international law. It encouraged Switzerland to ensure that high-level State officials took a clear stance against the scourge of racism, including hostility towards Muslims and racist or xenophobic political discourse. Tunisia made a recommendation.

56. Turkey said that prohibiting minarets was not worthy of the country's outstanding image and reputation in human rights. It was concerned about growing xenophobia and intolerance and about the inappropriate use of article 261bis of the Criminal Code against persons who had expressed their opinions about historical events. Turkey made recommendations.

57. The United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland welcomed the creation of the Swiss Resource Centre for Human Rights and efforts to combat human trafficking. It encouraged Switzerland to enact legislation to tackle the sexual exploitation of women and girls and ensure that victims received support. It encouraged ratification of CPED and CRPD. It made a recommendation.

58. The United States of America was concerned at reports of insufficient care, lengthy detention and the treatment of migrants held in immigration detention. It was also concerned about the lack of detention facilities allowing for unaccompanied minors seeking immigration protection to be held separately from adults. It was concerned that minority groups were deprived of their right to express their cultural and religious traditions. It made recommendations.

59. Uruguay noted the cooperation of Switzerland with the universal human rights system and measures adopted to improve compatibility between popular initiatives and international human rights law. It asked whether child prostitution and the worst forms of child labour had been prohibited. Uruguay made recommendations.

60. Uzbekistan welcomed the establishment of the Swiss Resource Centre for Human Rights, but noted reports of shortcomings in combating racism and xenophobia, including the excessive use of force by police against immigrants. It also noted that International Labour Organization (ILO) experts had called upon Switzerland to take steps to protect children, especially those involved in prostitution. Uzbekistan made recommendations.

61. Viet Nam recognized that Switzerland, a country well known for its peaceful environment and human rights record, had spared no efforts in ensuring the rule of law, social welfare and gender equality. However, it expressed concern at the reported growth in racial discrimination and human trafficking. It made a recommendation.

62. Algeria highlighted that even a developed country was not immune to human rights weaknesses. It was concerned at an upsurge in racism, intolerance and xenophobia. According to Algeria, racism, particularly Islamophobia, was evident in public consultations such as those leading to a ban on minarets construction. Algeria made recommendations.

63. Angola noted Swiss efforts and commitment to combating racial discrimination. It asked what stage had been reached in consultations on draft amendments to legislation to more strictly regulate the right of foreigners to integration and increase their active participation. Angola made a recommendation.

64. Argentina commended Switzerland on establishing the Swiss Resource Centre for Human Rights and welcomed amendments to the Civil Code guaranteeing equality between spouses with regard to names and the right to nationality. Argentina made recommendations.

65. Switzerland thanked the delegations participating in the interactive dialogue for their interest in the functioning of the Confederation and the human rights situation in the country. With regard to matters raised during the dialogue and questions submitted in advance, the delegation provided the following comments.

66. Regarding the compatibility of popular initiatives with human rights, the delegation explained that the mechanisms of direct democracy were an essential part of the Swiss political tradition. Thus, popular initiatives were critical to secure the confidence existing between the State and its citizens. At the same time, Switzerland was aware of the challenges posed by some popular initiatives vis-à-vis fundamental freedoms. In 2010 and 2011, the Federal Council had prepared two reports proposing solutions and concrete measures to address this situation, envisaging also the possibility of extending grounds to invalidate popular initiatives to the infringement of the essence of fundamental Constitutional rights.

67. In response to recommendations that Switzerland accede to the First Optional Protocol to ICCPR, the delegation noted that the European Convention of Human Rights provided the same guarantees and a well-established control mechanism. Switzerland had joined this mechanism 35 years ago and accession to a parallel mechanism of protection thus did not seem urgent or indispensable. However, considering its commitment made during the first UPR review, the Government was indeed considering acceding to the Optional Protocol and had requested the new Resource Centre for Human Rights to prepare a comparative study on the jurisprudence of the Human Rights Committee and the Strasbourg Court.

68. On OP-CAT and the national mechanism of protection, the delegation recalled that the National Commission for the Prevention of Torture, established in 2010, was independent and tasked with visiting places of detention on a regular basis. The Commission had established a dialogue with the competent authorities and with national and regional partners. In its most recent report, the Commission had concluded that the material conditions of detention in Switzerland were generally good, although some gaps remained.

69. Regarding the situation of persons with disabilities, the process of ratifying CRPD ongoing. In that respect, the Federal Council aimed at suggesting to the Parliament the accession to the Convention within the ongoing legislative period (2011–2015).

70. Regarding the possible establishment of a national human rights institution, extensive consultations by the Federal Council had led to the conclusion that, indeed, the support such an institution could bring was necessary. In July 2009, the Federal Council had thus decided to launch the Swiss Centre of Expertise in Human Rights as a five-year pilot project. The Centre had begun its activities in May 2011 and would be subject to an evaluation in 2014, with a view to its possible continuation under the framework of the Paris Principles.

71. Concerning issues of discrimination and integration, Switzerland considered that constant efforts were required on the part of the State to address these. Given its legal and institutional specificities, Switzerland had adopted a sectorial approach. Instead of a national plan or a general law it had opted for a long-term strategy supported by the Confederation, the cantons and the communes. In line with the country's monistic legal tradition, the ICERD provisions were considered framework law in the country and the Federal Tribunal had used them in its jurisprudence. The Federal Council and Parliament thus considered that the current legislation offered enough protection against the different forms of discrimination. Regarding racist organizations, the delegation noted that, although Switzerland did not have a specific law banning them, measures were taken against any organization pursuing an illegal purpose.

72. On the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families (ICRMW), the delegation noted that Switzerland, like other European countries, was not considering its accession in the near future.

73. Armenia expressed appreciation for the country's balanced policy on national and religious minorities, as experienced by the Armenian community, with a commitment to justice, impartiality and human values. It noted its ongoing policy to protect persons with disabilities, but highlighted that migration management remained a challenge. Armenia made recommendations.

74. Australia welcomed initiatives to strengthen Swiss protection of human rights, particularly for asylum seekers and children, and prevent torture. It commended constitutional amendments to reinforce access to justice and the independence of the judiciary, gender equality and women's rights, and legislation to combat violence against women and trafficking in women. Australia made recommendations.

75. Bahrain said that human trafficking remained a major challenge and urged Switzerland to develop a national strategy to address this phenomenon and protect and assist victims. It asked about measures to ensure that female victims of violence were protected and had access to redress. Bahrain made a recommendation.

76. Bangladesh highlighted concerns expressed by several treaty bodies over the excessive use of force by police against asylum seekers, migrants and persons of African origin, the ban on construction of minarets, violence against women, high unemployment among migrants and women, and discrimination against travellers. Bangladesh made recommendations.

77. Belarus noted Swiss efforts to fulfil its international human rights obligations, but noted that it had entered many reservations on international instruments and did not sufficiently cooperate with special procedures concerning country visits. It was concerned at the excessive use of force by police against migrants and asylum seekers. Belarus made recommendations.

78. Romania commended the national report for reporting both on the position of the Government and civil society on the situation of human rights in Switzerland. It noted the ratification of various international instruments since the first review. It mentioned Swiss-Romanian cooperation in combating trafficking in persons. Romania made a recommendation.

79. Bhutan applauded the many efforts made by Switzerland to fulfil its human rights obligations, notably the establishment of the Swiss Resource Centre for Human Rights and its accession to international human rights instruments such as OP-CAT. Bhutan made a recommendation.

80. Botswana commended Switzerland on ratifying the Optional Protocol to CEDAW and OP-CAT and was satisfied with progress towards ratification of other international instruments. It welcomed the establishment of the Swiss Resource Centre for Human Rights and asked whether it would become a fully fledged national human rights institution at the end of the five-year pilot project.

81. Brazil commended Swiss efforts to promote gender equality. It was concerned, however, at the lack of provisions in the Criminal Code specifically addressing violence against women and the lack of effective measures to protect women, especially undocumented women, from becoming victims of human trafficking. Brazil made recommendations.

82. Bulgaria welcomed Swiss efforts to implement the accepted recommendations from the first UPR cycle and the broad consultations and inclusive dialogue with civil society in preparing the present report. It commended the ratification of several key international human rights instruments such as OP-CAT and OP-CEDAW. Bulgaria made recommendations.

83. Burkina Faso welcomed the amendment to the Penal Code concerning the extraterritorial practice of female genital mutilation by residents of Switzerland. It also noted efforts to address problems faced by migrants. It encouraged Switzerland to ratify international human rights instruments to which it had not yet acceded.

84. Burundi noted the establishment of the Swiss Resource Centre on Human Rights to strengthen national capacities for the implementation of human rights. It encouraged Switzerland to ensure equality between men and women and combat violence against women. It welcomed measures to separate minors from adults in preventive detention. It made recommendations.

85. Cambodia welcomed the approval by the Swiss Parliament of the Council of Europe Convention on Action against Trafficking in Human Beings and the signing in 2010 of the Council of Europe Convention on the Protection of Children against Sexual Exploitation and Abuse. It made recommendations.

86. Canada requested information about the extension of the permission to stay for women victims of domestic violence and the criteria to establish proof that they had been victims of such violence. It made recommendations.

87. Cape Verde encouraged Switzerland to align its national institution with the Paris Principles. It encouraged ratification of ICRMW and the implementation of national strategies to combat trafficking in persons and racial discrimination. It promoted the harmonization of human rights policies at the federal and cantonal level.

88. Chad commended the country's follow-up to the recommendations made during its first UPR. It appreciated its cooperation with international human rights mechanisms and welcomed its policies to protect youths from violence. It made a recommendation.

89. Chile noted Swiss efforts to ensure full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms and the establishment of the Swiss Human Rights Resource Centre, which demonstrated its institutional commitment to human rights issues. It made recommendations.

90. China noted with appreciation Swiss efforts to promote gender equality and child rights, protect women from domestic violence, combat trafficking in persons and provide assistance to persons with disabilities and migrants in their social integration. It made recommendations.

91. The Congo noted with satisfaction the entry into force of OPCAT and the Optional Protocol to CEDAW. It commended Switzerland for the withdrawal of its reservation to CEDAW to ensure wage equality between men and women. It congratulated Switzerland on its efforts to protect the rights of persons with disabilities, women and children, as well as its action in favour of human rights training around the world.

92. Costa Rica highlighted the country's accession to the Agreement on the Privileges and Immunities of the International Criminal Court, the ratification of OP-CAT and the establishment of a mechanism for visits to detention centres. It congratulated Switzerland on its project to establish a national institution in accordance with the Paris Principles. It made recommendations.

93. Cote d'Ivoire noted the country's signing of CPED, its recent accession to OPCAT and the creation of the National Commission for the Prevention of Torture. It commended Swiss efforts to manage migration issues. It made recommendations.

94. Cuba noted the country's action on gender issues, violence against women and protection of child rights. It recognized progress made in protecting persons with disabilities. More efforts were required to combat racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia. It urged Switzerland to increase its official development assistance contribution. It made recommendations.

95. Cyprus commended the particular emphasis paid to child rights and welcomed the implementation of the Optional Protocol to CRC. It enquired about initiatives undertaken to ratify the Council of Europe Convention on the Protection of Children against Sexual Exploitation and Abuse and measures to address the problem of juvenile suicides.

96. Ecuador acknowledged the ratification of OP-CAT and OP-CEDAW. It called for the ratification of CPED, CRPD, the First Optional Protocol to ICCPR and ILO Convention No. 122. It made a recommendation.

97. Egypt commended Switzerland for promoting women's and children's rights and the responsiveness towards requests for cooperation in repatriating illicit funds. It took note of measures taken to combat racism, xenophobia and religious intolerance but expressed concern at referenda on the construction of minarets and the expulsion of foreign nationals. It made recommendations.

98. France congratulated Switzerland on the ratification of OPCAT and the Optional Protocol to CEDAW. France encouraged the introduction of specific Penal Code provisions to punish torture. It enquired about the adoption of measures to combat intolerance based on religion or belief. It made recommendations.

99. Germany commended Switzerland for its long-standing commitment to freedom and human rights and expressed appreciation for Swiss commitment to implementing the recommendations of the first UPR cycle. It made a recommendation.

100. Greece appreciated Swiss efforts to implement the recommendations of the first cycle and welcomed the many positive developments in the country. It made recommendations.

101. Honduras recognized the creation of the Human Rights Resource Centre. It inquired about measures to protect undocumented persons who become victims of abuse and human trafficking. It made a recommendation.

102. Hungary commended Swiss efforts to combat trafficking of Eastern European persons. It regretted the decision to reintroduce quotas for eight new European Union member States regarding employment. It made recommendations.

103. India commended Switzerland for programmes to strengthen gender equality and women's rights, including the introduction of maternity leave with pay. It requested information on steps taken to promote the integration of migrants, women and young people of foreign origin in the labour market. It made recommendations.

104. Indonesia expressed concerns at the ban on the construction of minarets and the public display of posters inciting racial hatred. It made recommendations.

105. The Islamic Republic of Iran welcomed the revision of the Constitution to reinforce guarantees regarding access to justice and the independence of the judiciary. It made recommendations.

106. Iraq recognized Swiss efforts to combat trafficking in women and girls and programmes to combat racial discrimination. It enquired about measures to put an end to excessive use of force and forced expulsions of asylum seekers. It asked about measures to combat racial discrimination and measure to improve the situation of migrants and minorities. It made a recommendation.

107. Ireland welcomed the country's positive measures to strengthen gender equality and women's rights. It commended the introduction of a specific Penal Code provision to penalize female genital mutilation. Ireland acknowledged the country's agreement to ratify the Council of Europe Convention on Action against Trafficking in Human Beings. It made recommendations.

108. Italy noted cases of xenophobic attitudes targeting foreigners and asked for information on the subject of racial profiling. It enquired about discrimination in the employment field and about the implementation of the action plan on gender equality prepared in 2009 after the review by CEDAW.

109. Jordan highlighted the country's role in advancing the agenda of human rights with respect to human rights defenders, gender equality and the protection of civilians. It noted the Ordinance on protection measures for children and young people and the Federal Act on Criminal Procedures applicable to Minors. It made recommendations.

110. Kuwait expressed concern at increasing racism and xenophobia and stressed the importance of combating all forms of racism and racial discrimination and the adoption of comprehensive legislation. It highlighted the importance of preserving religious freedom. It made a recommendation.

111. The Lao People's Democratic Republic noted that Switzerland was a party to many human rights instruments and contributed in an inclusive and open manner to the strengthening of the Council. It encouraged Switzerland to continue its cooperation with the United Nations and other international organisations to develop further the legal and institutional framework with respect to the promotion and protection of human rights in Switzerland.

112. Libyan Arab Jamahiriya commended the efforts made by Switzerland to promote human rights and the progress achieved. It encouraged dialogue with different ethnic and religious groups. Libyan Arab Jamahiriya made recommendations.

113. Liechtenstein commended Switzerland for ratifying the Optional Protocol to CEDAW and policies strengthening gender equality. It welcomed Swiss efforts in ensuring the right to education of every child, irrespective of its residence status. It made recommendations.

114. Malaysia acknowledged Swiss efforts in adopting legislative measures and programmes to strengthen gender equality and women's rights and in combating violence against women and trafficking in persons. It noted racism, intolerance and xenophobic attitudes against non-citizens and other minorities in the country. It made recommendations.

115. Thailand noted steps taken by Switzerland to accede to OP-CAT and CEDAW's Optional Protocol. It applauded efforts in protecting women's and children's rights. On the treatment of minor offenders, it recognized the efforts made with regard to pretrial detention. It made recommendations.

116. Namibia acknowledged the Swiss commitment to protecting the human rights of its nationals and foreigners living in the country. It acknowledged the high life expectancy and the efficient health system in Switzerland. It made recommendations.

117. In conclusion, Switzerland emphasized the importance of the interactive dialogue for its national human rights policy, noting that human rights were never guaranteed and needed to be defended and internalized by all on a daily basis. It was thus important that the human rights policy of each country was reviewed on a regular basis and that the reviews were followed up with concrete action. Given the importance of the follow-up process, Switzerland had to work towards strengthened cooperation and coordination in this area between its federal departments and with the 26 cantons.

118. Switzerland also highlighted the importance of its foreign policy commitments in working towards, among others, the abolition of the death penalty globally, the increase of its official development aid, the restitution of illicit funds or in the field of business and human rights

119. Switzerland stated that its system of direct democracy greatly contributed to a culture of human rights, as it allowed for a permanent public debate on all subjects and values. Another pillar – federalism – was similarly important, as it ensured the proximity between the inhabitants and the authorities.

120. The delegation expressed its gratitude to States, the Council President, the troika and the Secretariat for their respective contributions to the review process, noting that it would carefully analyse the recommendations it had received.

121. The delegation underlined the importance that Switzerland placed on the UPR process and its membership in the Human Rights Council, noting that it was preparing to renew its candidature, and reconfirming the pride which Switzerland took in hosting this institution.
