Focus and objectives: This session aims to:

- Explore the advantages and feasibility of a ‘shared responsibility model’ towards mobilising joint remediation measures via multi-stakeholder collaboration. This form of remedial measures provides the potential for scale and impact by maximizing resources, as well as present opportunities for leverage to improve conditions throughout global supply chains.

- Propose a collective response that we call shared responsibility, in which global and local businesses, governments, international organizations and other stakeholders devise collective solutions and share the financial cost of facilitating remedial measures for some of the most entrenched human rights challenges in global supply chains.

- Focus on a measured and consistent approach towards remediation – emphasising that remediation is not a quick fix solution to address systemic issues at a multi-stakeholder level.
• Reflect on different perspectives on what is needed to successfully implement joint remediation to find sustainable solutions, as well as what challenges may arise during these collaborations.

• Identify the business imperative to understand the concept and implications of access to remedy and what is needed to engage with producers and stakeholders along the whole supply chain.

• Through practical case studies the session will highlight different forms of remedial measures to address supply chain challenges - such as gender-based violence, forced labour and migration, the panellists will share their experiences of joint remediation efforts in Thailand, India, Turkey and Bangladesh.

• The session will reflect what balance is needed between using leverage with a producer to address supply chain challenges and exerting concerted pressure. It will further explore the importance of continuous dialogue with producers and stakeholders in sourcing countries to ensure that producers actively implement remedial processes as longer-term measures towards supply chain sustainability.

Discussions will explore innovative ways to support businesses to react better and be better at being proactive and responsive to emerging issues, e.g. by collecting data to predict and identify trends, conduct root cause analysis, etc. In this manner, the chain of remediation efforts is not only addressing actual issues, but are also linked to working towards mitigating, preventing and even anticipating future occurrence.

The panel will also address what solutions and measures joint remediation can provide, e.g.

• Convening the right people (stakeholders, businesses, producers) and tailor the remediation specific to the country and culture, influence, potential conflict of interest, etc.

• Taking responsibility for the facilitation of process

• Empowerment of producers and suppliers to handle remediation on their own and for the longer-term.

• Measuring improvement, e.g. through capacity building training, close dialogue and collaboration with producers and stakeholders, etc.

• Implementing effective monitoring tools, such as auditing, assessments, etc.

Key discussion questions:

Key issues to be addressed include:

- What are the major issues that the private sector faces to implement joint multi-stakeholder remediation in global supply chains?
- How can these efforts be adapted to effectively respond to similar or different situations across countries and sectors?
- What would it take to systemize it?
- What are the innovative and replicable approaches that businesses together with stakeholders can implement towards joint remediation and prevention efforts?
- Should there be more Industry-specific approaches rather than company-specific approaches that are necessary for addressing the most serious human rights risks?
- What opportunities are there for leverage to improve working conditions within the framework of the state’s duty to protect and the corporate responsibility to respect human rights?

Format of the session: Through an exchange of ideas and experiences, this session aims at reflecting perspectives from various stakeholders on their role in implementing effective joint remediation via a shared responsibility approach and efforts aimed at enabling long-term solutions. The moderator will ensure that the amount of prepared speaking time is kept to a minimum to ensure there is at least 20 minutes reserved for audience interaction and discussion.

Part 2: Strengthening access to effective remedy: Multistakeholder initiatives reflect on cases and challenges

Brief description: This session organized by Organized by Swiss Federal Department of Foreign Affairs, Fair Labor Association (FLA), Fair Wear Foundation (FWF), Global Network Initiative (GNI), International Code of Conduct for Private Security Providers (ICoCA) and Institute for Multi-Stakeholder Initiative Integrity (MSI Integrity) will discuss, in two sets of multi-stakeholder initiatives, their remedy function. Approaches in two key areas will be compared and contrasted: their role in strengthening industry mechanisms, including guidance on appropriate policies; and their organizational mandate to provide access to remedy for violations of their standards.

Background to the discussion: Starting out: from governance charter mandate to mechanism: the ICoCA and GNI reflect on progress and challenges. What are some of the challenges associated with developing effective grievance mechanisms for a service oriented industry sector? How do you engage with member companies to ensure they have adequate grievance mechanisms in place, and what benchmarks do you use to gauge effectiveness? How does this inform your approach to your MSI’s own grievance mechanism? What are some of the key questions and challenges you have faced in elaborating your approach to remedy?

The session will subsequently turn to the following questions: How a remedy mechanism can strengthen overall standards setting and compliance: the FLA, FWF and MSI Integrity discuss mature mechanisms in manufacturing and agricultural sectors. How does the remedy function fit within the MSI’s larger effort to set and enforce standards? How are your mechanisms used – for what issues and by whom, and with what outcomes? What are the challenges faced in ensuring access to the mechanism for workers and unions? Based on your experiences, what are some emerging benchmarks for remedy mechanisms in the manufacturing and agriculture sectors?

Session objectives: Four accountability oriented multistakeholder initiatives discuss their remedy function, comparing and contrasting approaches in two key areas: their role in strengthening industry mechanisms, including guidance on appropriate policies; and their organizational mandate to provide access to remedy for violations of their standards.
Key discussion questions:

For entire panel:

- Based on your differing approaches, trajectories and level of development, what common benchmarks can we identify for the role of the remedy function within an accountability oriented MSI?
- What are some of the most important ways in which this function fills existing gaps? Limitations?
- Ongoing challenges?

Open discussion session:

- How do we make grievance mechanisms sustainable in terms of workload, expense, and consistency across different countries?
- How can we link the lessons learned from the grievance cases to build capacity at the local level (particularly government institutions) to handle these cases?

Speakers:

- Meg Roggensack, board member of the FLA, GNI, and ICOCA. (Moderator)
- Remy Friedmann, Board Chair, ICoCA and Senior Advisor, Human Security and Business, Human Security Division, Swiss Federal Department of Foreign Affairs
- Judith Lichtenberg, Executive Director, GNI
- Jorge Perez-Lopez, Senior Advisor, FLA
- Margreet Vrieling, Associate Director, FWF
- Madeline Hung, Research Coordinator, MSI Integrity

Format of the session: Discussion in two parts, the first focused on the ICoCA and GNI and the challenges of starting out; the second focused on more mature grievance mechanisms from manufacturing and agriculture sectors. All panelists will compare and contrast experiences, and provide insights about emerging good practice and benchmarks. The moderator will then open the discussion to all attendees to consider issues of access and strengthening local capacity
