Simon Wiesenthal Center Report on Antisemitism

Submitted to Dr. Ahmed Shaheed The United Nations Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Religion or Belief

The Simon Wiesenthal Center (SWC), an ECOSOC accredited NGO at the United Nations is pleased to present the following report on antisemitism to the Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Religion or Belief.

The SWC is named after the famous Holocaust survivor, pursuer of Nazi war criminals and human rights advocate, Simon Wiesenthal. Under the leadership of its Dean and Founder, Rabbi Marvin Hier and Associate Dean Rabbi Abraham Cooper, the SWC both worked with Mr. Wiesenthal and has continued to carry on his legacy today. The SWC is a global human rights organization researching the Holocaust and hate in a historic and contemporary context. The Center confronts antisemitism, hate and terrorism, promotes human rights and dignity, stands with Israel, defends the safety of Jews worldwide, and teaches the lessons of the Holocaust for future generations. It is one of the largest Jewish human rights agencies, with offices in North and South America, Europe and the Middle East, and with a strong presence in Asia as well, and is engaged internationally with accreditation at the UN, UNESCO, OSCE, Organization of American States (OAS), the Latin American Parliament (PARLATINO) and the Council of Europe.

Seventy five years after the end of the Holocaust, fueled by social media and an increasingly raw and divisive political discourse, nourished by extreme nationalism and radical religion, antisemitism has become a critical issue in today’s world. In Europe, where the Holocaust decimated what was once a center of Jewish life, the communities that have survived and struggled to rebuild are now facing such acute risk that even non-Jewish political leaders are have publicly expressed concern about the possible of end of thousands of years of European Jewish life.¹

Violent antisemitism has permeated Europe, with Jews facing physical threats in countries like France, the Netherlands, Belgium, Denmark, Germany and others, while antisemitism has been legitimized as political discourse in the United Kingdom, Sweden, Poland, Hungary and throughout the continent.

Antisemitism is not only violent; it appears in many different forms throughout Europe. In France, not only are Jews murdered, but when an arrest is finally made judges appear to look for excuses to avoid bring the accused to trial, perhaps because of the Muslim identity of the accused. ² This leniency makes it appear as if there is a double standard and that Jews are not treated equally, and thus undermines Jewish belief in the fairness of the French judicial system.
This threat emanating from radical Islamists and is not limited to France but lies behind a majority of the physical attacks on Jews in recent years in Europe. Although not as prevalent,

¹ See for example, the 2015 remark of Frans Timmermans, then first vice president of the European Commission, at a memorial service for the Jews murdered in the attack on the kosher market in Paris “If there’s no future for Jews in Europe, there’s no future for Europe,” (https://www.jpost.com/Diaspora/EU-official-Without-Jews-Europe-has-no-future-388688)

antisemitic violence from the extreme right wing also appears to be growing in Germany and elsewhere.³

While not as murderous in action although equally violent rhetorically, antisemitism on the Left also presents a growing threat. The use of violent language and harsh rhetoric, particularly involving Israel, but increasingly invoking traditional antisemitic tropes has poisoned the atmosphere in many places. In the United Kingdom the Labour party has been exposed as a party that, as described by one of its former members is “institutionally antisemitic”.⁴ Jeremy Corbyn, the leader of the party has proven himself to be a conduit for antisemitsm, unwilling to face the problem and to lead any initiative against it. Indeed, when the overwhelming majority of British Jews called upon Labour to adopt the International holocaust remembrance Alliance (IHRA) Working Definition of Antisemitism, Corbyn tried to derail the effort and limit the adoption.⁵

Surveys and statistics supply evidence of this fear. The Fundamental Rights Agency’s second survey of European Jews released in November 2018, reveals four key findings

a) Antisemitism pervades everyday life

b) Pervasive antisemitism undermines Jews’ feelings of safety and security

c) Antisemitic harassment is so common that it becomes normalised.

d) Antisemitic discrimination in key areas of life remains invisible.⁶

The result is that over 90% of Europe’s Jewish population surveyed feel that antisemitism is growing in their countries, and most feel that little or no effort is being made to fight it.\(^7\)

The effects of these actions in the political, judicial, legal and social spheres create a corrosive atmosphere where Jews become afraid to be publicly identified as Jews. The FRA survey clearly pointed this out – over three quarters of the Jews surveyed in France, Denmark, Sweden and Germany “at least occasionally avoid wearing, carrying or displaying items” that might publicly identify them as being Jewish.\(^8\) And when antisemitism is identified, the reaction is often a cover up or a refusal to act, as in the recent case at the prestigious Karolinska University Hospital in Stockholm (which is affiliated with institution that grants the Nobel Prize of Medicine).\(^9\)

In the United States the feeling of comfort that Jews have experienced over recent generations has been shattered by a string of violent antisemitic attacks. The number of hate crimes in the United States has continued to rise over the course of the past several years.\(^10\) In 2017, the most recent year for which FBI statistics are available, there were more than 7,100 hate crime incidents in the United States.\textsuperscript{11} 1,749 of these hate crimes were defined as crimes based on religious orientation. Of these, 58.1\% of the perpetrators committed their crimes based on antisemitic bias (as opposed to 18.6\% based on an Islamophobic bias, 4.3\% on anti-Catholic bias, 2.3\% anti-Protestant, 1.5\% anti-Sikh, etc.).

\(^7\) “Almost 80% do not report serious incidents to the police or any other body. Often this is because they feel nothing will change.” (https://fra.europa.eu/en/press-release/2018/persistent-antisemitism-hangs-over-eu)

According to the Anti-Defamation League (ADL) antisemitic crimes stayed relatively static at extraordinarily high levels in 2017 and 2018 (with 1,986 crimes in 2017 and 1,879 crimes in 2018, as opposed to 941 incidents in 2015). 59 people were subject to violent crimes among the 2018 incidents, which is an increase of 105\% over the number of such crimes in 2017. 11 of these individuals were murdered during the October 2018 attack of the Tree of Life synagogue in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. And most recently there was the antisemitic attack on the Chabad synagogue in Poway, California, in April 2019, during which three people were wounded and one was murdered.

The Simon Wiesenthal Center has discerned three major trends in current antisemitism.

First is that of traditional antisemitism. This is the antisemitism that is sometimes assumed to be the province of right wing extremists, or white supremacists, but is actually wider raging than that and can be found in left wing circles as well. It trades on traditional stereotypes and tropes that are rooted deeply into Western culture and have evidently been lying dormant after \textsuperscript{11} According to the Bureau of government Statistics the number could even be higher; a review of data collection procedures found that the number of crimes could be as high as 250,000 because of lack of reporting and/or poor reporting of hate crimes.

the Holocaust before rising again in our time. Some recent violent examples in the United States include the shootings at synagogues in Pittsburgh and California, as well as the murder of a gay Jewish college student in California. This followed on the heels of the infamous march in Charlottesville, Virginia where Nazi slogans were chanted. However, this antisemitism has not been limited to the fringes of society, as last year’s elections saw two Republican candidates for Congress (Arthur Jones and John Fitzpatrick) who were outright neo-Nazis and Holocaust deniers. In Germany investigations have revealed right wing extremist networks within the police, and in the United Kingdom the government reports that “the threat from extreme right-wing terrorism has evolved in recent years, and it is growing.”\(^\text{12}\) In Austria, a leader of a far right party that had been formed under a cloud of antisemitism and even recently faced charges of antisemitism in its ranks was, until he was implicated in a financial scandal, a member of the ruling coalition.

Second is that of antisemitism in the guise of anti-Zionism. Often linked to followers of radical Islam, this version had exploded into violence and murder in Europe, with notable examples including the murders at the Jewish school in Toulouse in 2012, at a Paris kosher market in 2015, the murders at the Jewish Museum of Belgium in 2014, a murder at the synagogue in Copenhagen in Denmark in 2015 and the murder of a Holocaust survivor, again in Paris in 2018. This is only a partial list of the murders of Jews; it does not include the wounded or assaulted, including sexual assaults. In the United Kingdom it has become a feature of political discourse, centered around the Labor Party and radical leftist activists. In Sweden the Jewish community of Malmo living in fear from constant threats of physical violence from radical Muslims.

In the United States it had mostly been the province of college activists who have on some campuses targeted Jewish students and staff because of their support of Israel. This has manifested in attempts to create a physically hostile environment while efforts to force universities and colleges into boycotts of Israeli institutions and academics. Recently it has even penetrated into the United States Congress, with freshman Democrats Omar Ilhan and Rashida Tlaib expressing antisemitic comments connected to supporters of Israel.

The third lies in the area of Holocaust distortion, which is frequently allied with extreme nationalistic political movements and ideologies. In doing so traditional antisemitic attitudes are excused and sometimes encouraged to reappear. Examples of this abound in countries like Poland, Hungary, Serbia, Croatia, Lithuania and Ukraine. Poland has in the last few years been the scene of many antisemitic outbursts by politicians, and these expressions can be found on state media and other influential organs. Recently some of these activities have been exported to Western countries like the United States. In Hungary statues to Nazi era collaborators have been raised by the government and a campaign with antisemitic overtones has targeted a leading liberal Jewish international financier. In Croatia a former government minister turned out to be an apologist for the Ustashe collaborators, and in Ukraine a cult has persisted around Stepan Bandera, whose OUN-B movement initially cooperated with the Nazis and were responsible for the mass murder of Jews and others. In Poland and Ukraine laws have been passed that forbid shaming or criticizing the collaborators; these laws not only whitewash and protect antisemitic individuals and movements but they also inhibit research and threaten freedom of expression.

Finally, a recent CNN survey showed that 35% of Europeans polled believed that Israel uses the Holocaust to justify its actions. The recent surge in antisemitism from all these streams has been essentially fueled by social media. Without the delivery system of online antisemitism (and all other forms of hate speech), antisemitism would not be flourishing today.

The Simon Wiesenthal Center was a pioneer in monitoring and fighting online antisemitism. Beginning in the mid-1980’s, the Center was the first Human Rights organization to monitor Digital Hate, even before the coming of the World Wide Web in late 1994. In March 1995, Stormfront became the first white supremacist site on the World Wide Web, making the transition from a “BBS” (Digital Bulletin Board System). In 1997, the Center published Racism, Mayhem and Terrorism – The Emergence of an Online Subculture of Hate, the first of 22 interactive reports which are now titled Digital Terrorism and Hate. (In 2002, the SWC noticed a convergence of Hate and International Terrorist groups online and added Terrorism to its monitoring.) In 2005, SWC noted the first hate page on Facebook, leading to the monitoring of Facebook and other social media platforms as the came online. For the last twenty two years our Digital Hate and Terrorism Project has produced an annual electronic report of the state of antisemitism and other forms of extremism online and made it available for policy makers, law enforcement agencies, and the public. The Center sees the need for this report as growing every year.

enforcement and educational users. We have published some of the earliest and most important scholarly work on the internet and antisemitism.\(^\text{14}\)

A few years ago we began grading the major tech companies on their approaches to this issue, and have consequently created strong working relationships with them, leading to some significant successes in getting hateful material pulled down; but we have also noted great difficulty in moving beyond singular cases and achieving the establishment of or living up to corporate standards.\(^\text{15}\)

Over the last few years the Wiesenthal Center has been involved in significant efforts in raising awareness about the pernicious presence of antisemitism and in fighting it on multiple fronts.
The Center’s Director of International Affairs, Dr. Shimon Samuels, has forged a strong relationship with UNESCO, which has led to joint conferences and exhibitions, including the acclaimed travelling exhibit \textit{People, Book, Land: The 3500 Year Relationship of the Jewish People with the Holy Land}, and has, in his role as the SWC’s Representative to the United Nations in Geneva, been active in countering antisemitism there.

Chief Nazi Hunter Dr. Efraim Zuroff has been the major voice and activist in bringing the last Nazi’s to justice, which has triggered public debates and renewed awareness in many European countries.

Mark Weitzman, the Center’s Director of Government Affairs and Representative to the United Nations in New York was responsible for introducing and steering to adoption (with Romanian Ambassador Mihnea Constantinescu, the then Chair of the International Holocaust Remembrance Alliance) the IHRA’s Working Definition of Antisemitism and was also the lead author of IHRA’s Working Definition of Holocaust Denial and Distortion. He has also been involved with the OSCE and the UN in New York in efforts to counter antisemitism and is editing and publishing next year a new volume on antisemitism, which is geared to becoming the major college and university text on the subject for the next generation.

Recommendations

The following are a brief list of recommendations that focus on how the United Nations could more effectively be mobilized to fighting antisemitism.

1) The UN should formally adopt the IHRA definitions

2) The UN should appoint a high-level point person to monitor, report and recommend action regarding antisemitism

3) There should be an annual report on antisemitism, gathering data from all member countries

4) The UNHCR must stop it’s barrage of non-stop anti-Israel moves
5) UNRWA’s must revise its curriculum that won’t mention Israel in its textbooks but holds up terrorists as heroes to emulate.

6) All UN staff, including UNWRA need to be trained to recognize and required to fight antisemitism.

7) UNESCO must resist all attempts to distort history for political purposes such as that are aimed at erasing the Jewish (and Christian) connection to the Holy Land and a creating a false narrative that claims historic religious sites as exclusively Muslim.

8) UN should support and distribute UNESCO publications on antisemitism, such as the publication Addressing anti-semitism through education: guidelines for policymakers.

In 2017, Berkeley professor and founder of Students for Justice in Palestine, Hatem Bazian, re-tweeted at least two anti-Semitic memes and was later forced to issue an apology. This meme, featuring the image of an Orthodox Jew in traditional clothing reads "Mom, Look! I is Chosen! I can now kill, rape, smuggle organs & steal the land of the Palestinian Yay #Ashke-Nazi." The hashtag #Ashke-Nazi features similar images and anti-Semitic pronouncements. It was still active as of February 2018. In December 2016, Bazian posted a tweet stating "Historical evidence does not support Zionist claims re the Western Wall - Mondoweiss."
Français Parti Goyim (FPG) is an anti-Semitic vk.com community with over 600 members. The FPG is part of a worldwide internet-based movement of Goyim Party (GP) groups. The groups use the Jewish term “Goyim” to define themselves as non-Jews, and use a logo similar to a Nazi swastika in color and style. Members of the GP movement believe that Western countries are under Zionist control and that Jews secretly dictate domestic and international policy to enhance their own political and financial power. The FPG frequently shares posts on vk.com that argue that France is under Zionist control, and that Jews are responsible for many of the problems they believe exist in French society.
Camelot Daily is an anti-Semitic "news agency" that exposes alleged Jewish control of the media. They argue that Jews worship at the "Synagogue of Satan" (Revelation 2:9, 3:9) and attack civilization through their control of the media and governments around the world. After Camelot Daily was banned by YouTube, they began posting videos on a daily basis to Bitchute, an alternative service. In October 2018, they posted a video created by notorious American anti-Semite Brother Nathanael, titled "Jews Worship Satan at Israel’s 'Wailing Wall'". He refers to the Jewish yarmulke as "the mark of the beast", and argues that the Jews are falsely claiming the "wailing wall" to be sacred. He calls the wall "the seat of a Satanic ritual" and mockingly refers to the Jewish practice of "Davening" as a "lewd, occult ritual".
Der Sturmer (The Attacker) was a weekly Nazi tabloid that was known for its lurid anti-Semitic and sexual content. After World War II its publisher, Julius Streicher, was convicted of crimes against humanity and executed. His last words (before his hanging) referred to the Jewish holiday of Purim, which is based on the Biblical Book of Esther and describes how a planned genocide of the Jews was averted and how the Jews fought back against their oppressors. This page features a video by prominent American anti-Semite and racist, David Duke using that story as a base for charging Jews with violent hatred of non-Jews.
Alison Chabloz is a British Holocaust denier and musician. Her blog on Wordpress posts Holocaust denial and anti-Semitism articles, under the guise of promoting freedom of speech. She refers to “the magical six million figure and the fantastical gas chamber murder weapon”. An article from June 2016 argues that “Jews suffered no more and no less than other groups during World War Two”. She also focuses on the legal problems Holocaust deniers such as Vincent Reynourd and Robert Faurisson have faced, which she considers to be “anti-revisionist laws”. Chabloz also has a presence on Twitter, Facebook and YouTube. Her video “(((Survivors)))” is a demo of her latest song which “reveals the outrageous lies of so-called ‘Holocaust’ survivors.” Her song is set to the tune of the popular Jewish song Hava Nagila. The use of...
Gods Word is a neo-pagan community found on the Russian social network vk.com. The group is part of a movement promoting a return to paganism as a way of ensuring the survival of the white race and triumph of white supremacy. The group's logo is similar to that used by Green Terror, an ecofascist neo-Nazi group. It contains a Sunwheel, a symbol commonly used by white supremacists in place of a Swastika. God's Word features many anti-Semitic postings, including two that contend that the Azov Battalion and the pro-Russian separatist movement are being controlled by the Jews who intend to gain control over Ukraine. Another post shows t-shirts for sale with a "White Power World Wide" logo and the Swastika on them. The Azov Battalion is a far-right volunteer militia that supports the Ukrainian government in its fight against the pro-Russian rebels who have seized territory in Eastern Ukraine. They have been criticized for their use of Nazi emblems on their uniforms.
In July 2014, visiting Danish Imam Sheikh Abu Bilal Ismail gave a Friday sermon in Berlin's Al Nur Mosque and called on Allah to "destroy the Zionist Jews. They are no challenge for you." He went on to say "count them and kill them to the very last one." His sermon, posted online, drew the interest of German authorities who began an investigation. The Al Nur Mosque is also the site of the Mosque Association, by its own definition a radical fundamentalist group, and has drawn the interest of Germany's Verfassungsschutz (Office for the Protection of the Constitution) for its reputation as the "center of Salafism (traditionalist, ultra conservative)" in Berlin.
Biblioteca Y Doctrina Nacionalista (Nationalist Library) is a “Third Way” blog, which advocates extreme and "revolutionary" nationalism in "untamed, ancient and imperial" Peru. The Third Way is an ideology which tries to reconcile right wing and left wing politics by synthesizing right-wing economics and left-wing social policies. The blog offers numerous links to texts by notorious Nazis including Joseph Goebbels, and Hitler's Mein Kampf, and books such as Neo-Nazis in South America by Eberhardt Gheyn. The blog also has an article about Holocaust denial which claims 'The six million murdered Jews is a myth', and other anti-Semitic posts.
Nationalist.ro is a Romanian extreme nationalist website which describes itself as a portal for political incorrectness. The main theme throughout is the allegation of a purported New World Order (NWO) run by the Jews and Freemasons. NWO is a supposed secret totalitarian world government, and this website argues that it is creating a “world state of slavery”. Articles accuse Jews of being “masters of lies and deception”, and that they “infiltrate any gentile power source” to gain total control. There are also articles accusing Jews of creating the Nazi Holocaust in return for financial reparations. Nationalist.ro also has an active forum including threads which show a strong hatred for ‘gypsies’-Roma- who they charge are bringing crime to Romania.
Christian Identity Ministries is an Australia-based offshoot of the violent anti-Semitic and racist Identity groups in the US. Identity claims that Jews are literally the spawn of Satan, and thus must be eradicated, and that people of color are "mud people" and thus inherently inferior to whites. Identity has no connection with any mainstream Christian group or belief.

Curse on Zionism is one of a large number of Internet sites that attempt to use Jewish religious texts and teachings as an excuse for creating hatred against Jews. This Persian-language site alleges that the Jewish holiday of Purim, which in reality celebrates the escape of the Jewish people in the ancient kingdoms of Persia and Media thousands of years ago, is actually a justification of Jewish mass murder. Thus it claims to show that Jews had genocidal intent against Persians (current Iranians) religiously mandated!
