Fifty-fifth session

XX February—XX March 2024 Agenda Item 3 Promotion and protection of all human rights, civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, including the right to development

Report on the ninth session of the open-ended intergovernmental working group on transnational corporations and other business enterprises with respect to human rights*

Chair-Rapporteur: Cristian Espinosa Cañizares

* The annex to the present report is circulated in the language of submission only.

I. Introduction

- 1. The open-ended intergovernmental working group on transnational corporations and other business enterprises with respect to human rights was established by the Human Rights Council in its resolution 26/9 of 26 June 2014 and mandated to elaborate an international legally binding instrument to regulate, in international human rights law, the activities of transnational corporations and other business enterprises with respect to human rights.
- The working group's ninth session, which took place from 23 to 27 October 2023,1 opened with a statement from the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights.<sup>2</sup> He acknowledged the complexity of global value chains, often spread across States with different legal, regulatory, and human rights practices. While noting this interconnection could support economic growth and social development, he also warned of the human rights risks associated with sprawling and diffuse value chains, such as abuses of a range of labour rights, discrimination, harassment, and attacks against human rights defenders and Indigenous Peoples. The High Commissioner highlighted the significant efforts to prevent and mitigate these and other harms since the endorsement by the Human Rights Council of the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights in 2011; however, he recognized that more needed to be done and that the working group's efforts to develop an international legally binding instrument sought to respond to this need. He recalled the importance of human rights due diligence as a way for companies to proactively manage adverse human rights impacts and noted that regulations that required human rights due diligence could be a game changer in terms of benefitting workers and communities alike. He welcomed that elements of the updated draft legally binding instrument were aligned with the Guiding Principles, as this would help the efforts of the working group to protect the human rights of individuals and communities affected by business activities, hold businesses accountable, and provide access to effective remedies for affected stakeholders when things went wrong. In his view, it was essential to ensure that regulatory efforts at all levels fully aligned with the Guiding Principles to create a level playing field (ensuring that business operating in all regions adhere to the same standards worldwide), contribute to sustainable development, and empower communities. The High Commissioner flagged that this session was taking place during the 75th anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and he urged participants to consider concrete and innovative pledges, including to promote responsible business conduct, as part of his office's Human Rights 75 initiative.<sup>3</sup> He also wished that the working group would have constructive negotiations during the session towards the goal of enhancing accountability and access to effective remedies for those harmed by businessrelated activities.

II. Organization of the session

A. Election of the Chair-Rapporteur

3. The Permanent Representative of Ecuador, Cristian Espinosa Cañizares, was elected Chair-Rapporteur by acclamation following his nomination, on behalf of the Group of Latin American and Caribbean States, by the delegation of Trinidad and Tobago.

B. Attendance

4. The list of participants is contained in the annex to the present report.

&lt;sup>1</sup> The ninth session took place in a hybrid format to accommodate those who were not able to participate in person. Information about the modalities of the session is available at www.ohchr.org/en/hr-bodies/hrc/wg-trans-corp/session9. Webcasts of the meetings of the session in all United Nations official languages are available at https://media.un.org/en/webtv/.

C. Documentation

- 5. The working group had before it the following documents:
  - (a) Human Rights Council resolution 26/9;
  - (b) The provisional agenda of the working group;<sup>4</sup>
- (c) The updated draft legally binding instrument to regulate, in international human rights law, the activities of transnational corporations and other business enterprises;
  - (d) The programme of work;
- (e) Other documents, all of which were made available to the working group on its website.<sup>5</sup>

D. Adoption of the agenda and programme of work

- 6. The Chair-Rapporteur presented the draft programme of work, which had been circulated on 9 October 2023. He explained how the programme was organized in such a way as to promote substantive, State-led negotiations on the basis of the clean version of the updated draft legally binding instrument, as agreed in the recommendations adopted at the end of the eighth session.<sup>6</sup> In accordance with paragraph 25(g) of the eighth session report, the updated draft took into account the concrete textual proposals and comments by States during the eighth session, as well as the results of intersessional consultations as reported by the friends of the Chair. Non-State stakeholders' input into intersessional work was ensured through written contributions they had been invited to submit in line with paragraph 25(f) of the report. After presenting each item of the programme of work and the proposed modalities of the session, the Chair-Rapporteur invited comments.
- 7. A delegation on behalf of a regional group shared its concerns with the proposed programme of work. It was noted that the recommendations in the eighth session report called for the update of the legally binding instrument to take into consideration, among other inputs, the outcomes of regional consultations as reported by the friends of the Chair. However, as one of the friends of the Chair had not held intersessional consultations with its region, the updated draft did not contain intersessional contributions from that group. The delegate of that regional group explained that since the updated draft failed to incorporate their contribution, it failed to incorporate all regions' points of view and should therefore not be the basis of negotiations during the ninth session. Further, it was noted that the updated draft instrument's approach to the issue of scope risked exceeding the mandate of the working group as expressed in Human Rights Council resolution 26/9. The delegate of the regional group proposed that the working group instead base its work on the third revised draft instrument with textual proposals submitted by States during the seventh and eighth sessions. Many delegations that were part of the regional group, as well as delegations from other regions, shared similar concerns and voiced their support for the proposal to revert to the third revised draft with textual proposals.
- 8. A number of delegations opposed the proposal, noting that reverting to an older draft would stall progress of the working group. They highlighted that the recommendations and conclusions in the eighth session report were adopted by consensus, that those recommendations and conclusions referred to an updated draft legally binding instrument serving as the basis for negotiations for the ninth session, and that the Chair-Rapporteur had fulfilled those actions requested of it. Further, a delegation noted that it had spent months preparing inputs based on the updated draft, and it would not be able to participate if the working group discussed a different document.
- 9. The Chair-Rapporteur thanked all delegates for expressing their views. He noted that he had acted in accordance with the recommendations and conclusions of the eighth session report. He recalled that in February 2023, he held a meeting with the friends of the Chair in which he asked each region to hold two consultations between April and mid-June 2023 and report back by the end of June 2023 so that the Chair-Rapporteur could produce an updated draft instrument by the end of July 2023, as recommended in the eighth session report. In March 2023, the Chair-Rapporteur reiterated the timeline and shared guidelines for the consultations. Reminders were sent in April, May, and June of 2023 by the Secretariat. The Chair-Rapporteur noted that four of the five regions held their consultations and reported their outcomes by the end of June, and while it was unfortunate that a regional group was unable to conduct its consultations within the suggested timeline, it would be unfair to set aside the intersessional work done by the other four regions. As regards the concerns raised about scope, the Chair-Rapporteur noted that this discussion would be more appropriate during the negotiations of the instrument. In addition, he drew attention to the fact that the provisions of the updated draft legally binding instrument regarding scope were the same as those of the third revised draft. He thus proposed that the programme of work be adopted as originally presented and that all delegations' views be reflected in the report of the ninth session.

10. Delegations accepted that the updated draft legally binding instrument would serve as the basis of negotiations, but they disagreed as to whether the basis should be the clean version of the document or the version in track changes. It was proposed that the clean version of the document be used to capture edits in real time on the projected screen, and that the track changes version be displayed as a reference document. As there were no objections by States, the programme of work was adopted.

III. Opening statements

A. General statement and introductory remarks by the Chair-Rapporteur

- 11. The Chair-Rapporteur thanked the High Commissioner for his opening statement, the Office of the High Commissioner for its support and commitment to the process, States for their confidence placed in the Chair-Rapporteur, and to all those participating to develop an international legally binding instrument on business and human rights.
- 12. He recalled the history of the working group, highlighting resolution 26/9 that established the working group and the eight annual meetings held thus far. He recognized the valuable contributions of States, civil society, and other stakeholders over the years, including the inputs received in the intersessional period, all of which were taken into account in the process of drafting the updated instrument. He further acknowledged the activities of the friends of the Chair in the past year, and he called on all States and other stakeholders to share their proposals on the updated draft instrument during the session.
- 13. The Chair-Rapporteur shared the considerations underpinning the updates to the draft instrument, which included:
  - (a) streamlining the text and facilitating understanding of the provisions;
- (b) clarifying the linkages between different articles, with clearer cross-referencing and more consistent use of terminology;
- (c) employing language used in other treaties and instruments that addressed human rights and impacts related to business activities;
- (d) taking into account the views expressed by States on the wording and approach of different articles in the previous sessions of the working group; and
- (e) ensuring an adequate level of flexibility for the implementation by States of the obligations in the instrument, taking into account differences in legal systems, but without undermining the instrument's ability to achieve its objectives.
- 14. The Chair-Rapporteur highlighted that, while there had been significant progress made to date, broad participation of all actors, and particularly States, was necessary to advance the process. He advised that active, constructive and substantive participation in the sessions would be the best way for States to convey their interests and positions, and thus build and achieve consensus. This would be needed for the instrument to meet its objectives.

- 15. The Chair-Rapporteur responded to three issues that some stakeholders had raised during the previous few months. First, regarding the scope of the instrument, the Chair-Rapporteur shared his view that the future instrument should apply to all companies and business activities, both transnational and domestic, for numerous practical and ethical reasons. Second, regarding the issuance of suggested proposals in 2022, he reiterated that it was common practice for Chairs in treaty-making processes to make textual proposals to be considered alongside other drafts and drew attention to a note on the Chair capacity to issue proposals and convene friends of the Chair. Third, the Chair-Rapporteur clarified the basis for the updated draft instrument, which represented a consensus proposal on the various positions and proposals put forward during the working group's sessions and intersessional work to date.
- 16. Recognizing the important progress and commitments of States at the national and regional levels with respect to business and human rights, the Chair-Rapporteur noted with concern that business-related human rights abuses persisted in virtually all business sectors and all regions in the world, often leaving affected individuals and communities without options for access to justice and redress. He called for existing standards to be reinforced by binding international standards to protect and promote human rights in this field. This would be in line with the call in the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights for "a smart mix of measures national and international, mandatory and voluntary to foster business respect for human rights."
- 17. Finally, the Chair-Rapporteur recalled the fundamental objectives of the future legally binding instrument the protection and promotion of human rights in the context of business activities, the prevention of human rights abuses by companies, the guarantee of access to justice and effective redress for victims, and the strengthening of international cooperation in this area. Noting that the ninth session was taking place during the 75th anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Chair-Rapporteur further called on the working group to reflect on the principles on which the declaration was based. Additionally, the 10th anniversary of Human Rights Council resolution 26/9, adopted in June 2014, was also additional circumstance to renew the working group's commitment to its mandate. He called on States and other stakeholders to take concrete actions to ensure business respect for human rights and to give new impetus to the working group's process so it could achieve its objectives within a reasonable timeframe.

B. General statements

- 18. Delegations, non-governmental organizations and other stakeholders congratulated the Chair-Rapporteur on his election and thanked him for the updated draft instrument and his leadership thus far. Delegations and organizations also expressed their appreciation for the support of the High Commissioner and his office.
- 19. Delegations acknowledged positive impacts business enterprises could have, for instance in terms of helping to alleviate poverty and promoting economic and social progress. But many delegations and organizations also highlighted the darker side of progress, noting that business enterprises could affect the full enjoyment of human rights. It was noted that business enterprises had been responsible for abuses of a range of economic, social and cultural rights (such as the right to health), the right to life, and freedom of expression, among others, both in peace time and in situations of armed conflict. Certain groups often faced disproportionate impacts in this regard, such as Indigenous Peoples, peasants, and rural populations. Many delegations and organizations reminded the working group about the connections between environmental harm and human rights, and how business enterprises often escaped accountability for their impacts on climate change, biodiversity, and environmental damage more generally.

- 20. Delegations and organizations recalled various initiatives and instruments that had sought to address these problems. Many delegations reaffirmed their commitment to promoting human rights in the context of business activities, including through their efforts to implement the Sustainable Development Goals, Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises on Responsible Business Conduct, and International Labour Organization instruments. Numerous developments at the regional and national levels were shared. In addition to discussing new or forthcoming legislation mandating human rights due diligence, delegations shared their work on national action plans, guidelines for business enterprises, and other initiatives aimed at ensuring business respect for human rights. It was suggested that some of these initiatives could be a source of inspiration for the approach and content of the international legally binding instrument being discussed at the working group.
- 21. Delegations and organizations acknowledged the benefits such an instrument could have to complement existing initiatives. For instance, an international instrument could enhance protection against business-related human rights abuse globally, fill gaps in international law, level the playing field for businesses operating in jurisdictions with different regulatory requirements, and strengthen corporate accountability and access to remedy. However, some warned that a poorly drafted instrument with few ratifications would not realize these benefits and could possibly detract from more effective efforts at addressing business and human rights challenges.
- 22. Many delegations and organizations shared their views on what was needed to ensure that the legally binding instrument would be a success. Delegations considered that it was essential for the instrument to align with and build on the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights. There were further calls for the text to be clear, legally sound, balanced, and flexible enough to be implementable in different legal systems and contexts. Many delegations and organizations insisted that the instrument be victim-centred, as well as incorporate the views of the global south and civil society. Many delegations also noted the need for significant, cross-regional support. Different delegations and organizations also shared various suggestions of issues that should be addressed by the instrument.
- 23. Many delegations shared their appreciation for the Chair-Rapporteur's efforts with updating the legally binding instrument and considered the latest draft to be a step in the right direction. It was noted that the updated draft was more coherent, streamlined, and closely aligned with the Guiding Principles in various ways. Delegations appreciated that the draft gave them more flexibility in terms of implementation, and they welcomed provisions addressing children, gender, and the rights of victims. However, delegations and organizations also shared substantial concerns they had with the updated text. Many delegations and organizations raised concerns about the scope of the updated draft, questioning whether it was faithful to the mandate of resolution 26/9. Organizations considered that the revised versions of certain articles weakened human rights protections. More specifically, delegations and organizations questioned why references had been removed regarding the environment, peasants, and liability in certain situations. Additionally, there were calls to revise the text to clarify definitions, be less prescriptive, and enhance the instrument's compatibility with international law and domestic legal systems.
- 24. With respect to process, delegations voiced their concerns regarding the level of constructive participation by States in the working group. There were some calls for new thinking as to how to engage all stakeholders and overcome divergent positions within the group. Several delegations welcomed the intersessional efforts of the Chair-Rapporteur, specifically regarding the friends of the Chair process. However, many organizations called for there to be greater transparency of activities in the intersessional period, as well as more opportunities to participate in them. Nevertheless, many delegations and organizations noted their intention to participate constructively during the session of the working group, in order to find ways of strengthening the instrument and ultimate protection of those harmed in the context of business activities.

IV. State-led negotiations of the legally binding instrument

- 25. During the sessions allocated for the negotiation of the updated draft legally binding instrument, discussions proceeded article by article as follows. The Chair presented a draft article and the changes introduced. State delegations were then invited to present specific textual proposals on the various provisions of the article, as well as respond to any proposed text by expressing support or non-support or suggesting amendments. Specific textual proposals and amendments to such proposals were captured with proper attribution on the projected screen. Requests for clarifications and general comments were noted by the Chair, in particular for consideration after the session. Following the discussion among States, time was given to specialized agencies and other international organizations, national human rights institutions and non-governmental organizations to share their textual proposals and comments on the article.
- 26. Due to time constraints, the working group was able to negotiate only the preamble and Articles 1 to 3 during the ninth session.
- 27. Given the session's focus on State-led negotiations, article by article, the present report does not attempt to reflect all of the views expressed during the session. Rather, the addendum compiling the textual proposals made during the session should be consulted for an overview of States' positions. Full recordings of the session's deliberations are available in all official United Nations languages. 10 Further, general statements, as well as textual proposals and comments on articles made by non-State participants, delivered during the ninth session that were shared with the Secretariat are available on the webpage dedicated to the working group's session. 11

V. Consideration of the way forward

- 28. Following State-led negotiations, the working group devoted time to an informal discussion on the way forward. The Chair-Rapporteur introduced the session, noting that despite wide agreement on the importance of the working group and need for an international legally binding instrument, there remained a lack of consensus on fundamental issues. Political will was needed by all parties involved to work together towards consensus and a widely acceptable instrument. Given the 75th anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and the forthcoming 10th anniversary of the resolution creating the working group, the Chair-Rapporteur considered it to be an appropriate time to reflect on how to give new impetus to this important process. He proposed that a recommendation be made in the ninth session report that a new resolution be elaborated for this working group. Such a resolution would build on the progress made in the working group to date and follow up on resolution 26/9 without altering its core elements. The Chair-Rapporteur explained that a new resolution could help clarify key concepts, establish a timeline within which to complete the work, and obtain the resources needed to engage in more intersessional activities, such as regional consultations and the involvement of experts.
- 29. Delegations shared that they would need time to consult their respective governments regarding the Chair-Rapporteur's specific proposal. However, many delegations provided initial reflections and acknowledged that a new resolution could be helpful to bolster the work and provide needed resources to the working group. Several delegations and organizations expressed their opposition to changing resolution 26/9, and the Chair clarified that his proposal did not seek to do so.
- 30. A range of other suggestions were raised during the session. Many delegations considered that it would be helpful to have intersessional consultations focused on specific thematic issues, such as the scope of the instrument. Such consultations could be cross-regional and involve experts and practitioners from different fields and legal systems. It was also suggested that regional consultations take place for groups to further develop and express their views on the text. It was queried what role the friends of the Chair might have in these activities. Additionally, a delegation recommended that translations be made available of the draft instrument to help facilitate its review by different States. Many delegations acknowledged that these proposals had resource implications and suggested that any activities decided upon be realistic given financial resources and capacities of delegates.
